Motorist and Cellular Phones

A cellular phone in your vehicle can be an effective productivity tool and an invaluable link to the outside world. They can be important safety aids for drivers.

Many people use their cell phones to report collisions and crimes, and for personal safety. But don't let using one be a driving distraction. A cell phone, like anything else must be used properly. Currently, there are no laws against using a cellular phone while driving. But, you can be charged with dangerous or careless driving if you cause a collision while using one.

Here are some important points on using a cellular phone safely:

- Where possible, always pull over to the side of the road before using a cell phone.
- Keep your hands on the steering wheel and your eyes on the road. Taking your hands from the steering wheel to use a cell phone is dangerous.
- Use a hands-free microphone while driving. This allows you to keep both hands on the wheel. Never take notes while driving. Pull off the road at a safe distance or wait until your vehicle is stopped or parked to dial a number or take a call.
- If it's not safe or convenient to take a cell call while driving, let it ring. Let the cellular voice mail/message centre take a message from the caller.
- Keep calls as brief as possible. Distracted drivers are more likely to make a driving error or to react to slowly.
- For a new cell phone user, make sure you are comfortable and familiar with the phone before you take it on the road. Learn how to operate your phone without looking at it. It takes practice. Make sure the phone is easy to see and reach.

Be a cellular Samaritan. With a cell phone, you know that if you, or anyone else needs help, it's just a phone call away.

A first reading of a new law occurred on June 20, 2000. If this reading becomes law it would prohibit the use of a cellular phone, portable computer or fax machine while operating a vehicle. The only way to use your cellular phone while driving would be with the use of a hands-free device.

At Mornington Communications Cooperative Ltd. we want you to operate your cellular phone safely. Visit our Phone Store to see all the latest hands-free devices available for your cellular phone.
